

LIZ NABS GEORGE, HUBBY OF A DAY, FLEEING ON "L"

Deserted Bride Meets Erring Spouse and Both Land in Police Station.

When Mrs. Lizzy Meyer got off a fourth-floor Third Avenue "L" train at South Street during the rush hour this morning her thoughts were divided between getting to work on time and the longest husband who had been here for just one short, sweet day.

A man, eager to board the train, jumped into her as the gate swung open and she recognized him even while the guard was voicing the indignant protest: "Let 'em off first!"

"George!" she cried. "You have come back to me at last!"

"Don't you ever think it," said the man, wheeling sharply and starting for an exit.

"He's my husband!" shrieked Mrs. Meyer. "Oh, stop him! Stop him before it's too late!"

With rare presence of mind the gate-man slammed the wire door at the head of the stairs to the street and cut off George's escape. Mrs. Meyer ran to her husband's side and encircled him with her arms. Curious passengers forgot engagements with their employers and looked from the train to the station platform to see what manner of trouble there was between the thin lady who looked like a story-book spinster and the stout, gray-haired man.

George related the embrace. He tossed his wife's arm from about him and a careless finger left its mark on his right cheek. She came back pluckily and with such determination that Special Policeman George Schaubert had great difficulty in prying her from her errand spouse.

The atrocious teasing of the train's whistle brought Policeman Fleming of the East Fifty-first street station to the elevated platform. With his assistance Schaubert succeeded in enforcing an armistice.

"Now, once and for all, George," panted Mrs. Meyer, "are you coming back with me?"

"No," he belittled.

"Then," said his wife, triumphantly, "I shall have the officer take us to the police station. We'll see!"

"Just what I'm going to do, lady," interrupted Fleming. "Looks like disorderly conduct."

And that was exactly the charge he made against the pair at the East Fifty-first street station.

"If you'll call on the Bathgate avenue station in the Bronx, you'll find a warrant there for George Meyer, my husband," Mrs. Meyer told Lieut. McCullum. "He married me on June 14 at City Hall. It was very sentimental occasion. We each carried a copy of the matrimonial paper through which we had been brought together. Then, on June 15, he went away and he took $100 and all my jewelry. He knew how much I loved him, but he never let me hear whether he was alive or dead. Oh, I've been so worried!"

George, who is a machinist from Hudson, N. Y., was both perturbed and hurt by the charge.

"Why, Lizzy," he expostulated, "Don't you know I'm your husband? Don't you know that what's yours is mine? Don't you know I could have taken all your clothes, too, if I had been mean?"

There was indeed a warrant in the Bronx, but Lieut. McCullum decided the disorderly charge would have to go to the Harlem Court anyhow. Detectives from the Bathgate avenue station planned to be there to take care of George after he had paid a possible fine.
